

The Real Cost of a Bad Hire

A one-page guide to what mis-hires actually cost you and where to invest up front so you don't pay twice.

30-40%

of annual salary — total cost of a bad hire

WHY BAD HIRES HAPPEN

Unclear role definition. The job description was rushed; the real role was never pinned down.

Hiring manager / recruiter misalignment. Both sides thought they were clear. Neither pressure-tested it.

Speed over rigor. References skipped. The wrong-but-warm candidate gets the offer.

Hiring for yesterday. Scoped to last year's job, not the next eighteen months.

Culture guessed, not tested. No specific behaviors defined — so it becomes a gut call.

Offer-stage shortcuts. No close plan. No counter-offer strategy. The first choice walks.

WHERE TO INVEST UP FRONT

Spend an hour on the real brief. Three questions: first three problems this person solves, what 'great' looks like at six months, what would get them fired at twelve.

Build a real scorecard. Three to five outcomes that actually determine success. Not a wishlist.

Benchmark comp before opening the role. Not after your top candidate counters.

Protect the offer stage. Most searches are won or lost in the last ten days, references, comp conversation, counter-offer strategy.

QUICK ESTIMATOR

Use this to rough-estimate the real cost of a bad hire in your own organization. Numbers are intentionally conservative.

Line item	Formula	Your number
Annual base salary	As offered	$ _____
Recruiting + sourcing cost	20% x base	$ _____
Onboarding + training	15% x base	$ _____
Lost productivity (prorated)	40% x base x (months ÷ 12)	$ _____
Severance / separation	15% x base	$ _____
Team disruption	20% x base	$ _____
Second search to replace	4 months x (base ÷ 12)	$ _____
Estimated Total Cost		$ _____

Gut check: if your total comes in below six months of salary, you're underestimating. Revisit team disruption and opportunity cost, that's where most calculations break down.
